FOOD SUPPLEMENTS: POINTS TO PONDER

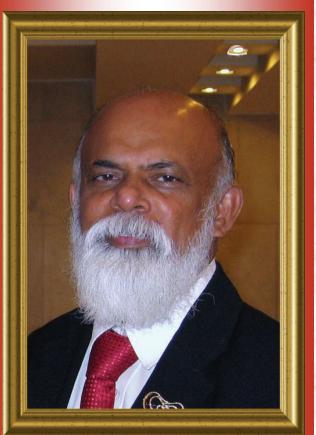

Do I need to think about my total diet?

Dietary supplements are intended to supplement the diets of some people, but not to replace the balance of the variety of foods important to a healthy diet. While you need enough nutrients, too much of some nutrients can cause problems.

Should I check with my doctor or healthcare provider before using a supplement?

This is a good idea, especially for certain population groups. Dietary supplements may not be risk-free under certain circumstances. Be sure to consult your physician before taking any supplement. If you plan to use a dietary supplement in place of drugs or in combination with any drug, tell your physician first.

Many supplements contain active ingredients that have strong biological effects and their safety is not always assured in all users. If you have certain health conditions and take these products, you may be placing yourself at risk.

Some supplements may interact with prescription and over-the-counter medicines

It is important to fully inform your physician about the vitamins, minerals, herbals or any other supplements you are taking. Taking a combination of supplements or using these products together with medications (such as prescription or over-the-counter drugs) could under certain circumstances produce adverse effects, some of which could be life-threatening.

Can the use of a substance be generally regarded as safe (GRAS), even if it is not listed by FDA?

Yes. Because the use of a GRAS substance is not subject to pre-market review and approval by FDA, it is impracticable to list all substances that are used in food on the basis of the GRAS provision (21 CFR 182.1). The use of a substance is GRAS because of widespread knowledge among the community of qualified experts, not because of a listing or other administrative activity.
